

Are you directly involved with your pet's health?

Do you feel like you are directly involved with your pet's health? If no, would you like to be? As the perception of pets has changed over the past fifty years, more and more pet owners are considering their furry friends members of the family. As members of the family, many people like to be actively involved in the medical care of their pet. We do know Dr. Google has become a common household action. Unfortunately, there is a lot of misinformation on the internet that can be misleading and sometimes harmful. Now there is a new way for owners to participate in the health care of their pets while working with their veterinarian to make the best decisions for their pets. It is called The Pet Wellness Report. If you log on to the link listed below, you can insert information about your pet and a multi-page report will be formulated based upon your pet's current health and risk factors. This report includes categories such as overall wellness, cancer, heart, dental, nutrition, and safety. Included within each category there is accurate information regarding where your pet is thriving and where there may be cause for concern. Once you have compiled this report, an appointment should be made with a veterinarian to discuss the results. Depending on the results of the report, blood and urine testing may be recommended as screening tools to help in the early detection of illness. These results will then be attached to the report for the owner to look at with the veterinarian. To become an active participant in your pet's health consider the Pet Wellness Report, log into the link below.
